Flown in on JFK's New Jet for Crisis Briefing

Three key congressional leaders leave President Kennedy's new jet plane at Washington after they were picked up and flown to the capital for consultations with Mr. Kennedy on the Cuban crisis. The plane first picked up Senator J. William Fulbright (center) (Dem., Ark.) chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, at Little Rock and then flew to Dobbins Air Force Base, Ga., where Senator Richard Russell (left) (Dem., Ga.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and Representative Carl Vinson (Dem., Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, boarded the plane.
